The Court House Yard. We meant to have resumed this subject in our last, but had neither time nor space. Our former article was, perhaps, rather strongly put, in defence of which we will observe that great moral and religious reformers and agitators, such as the FREE Parss and Rev. Dr. Talmage, find it expedient to adopt a somewhat hyperbolic style in order to attract attention. Our use of the term "job" appears to be distasteful to some of our county officials. We will therefore withdraw it, and see how much the ease is changed thereby. One thing is certain the court house yard remains in a shameful condition through somebody's delinquency of duty. And it is extremely odd that such is the fact. Bear in mind that we are not arguing in favor of any elaborate or expensive laying out of the grounds, but simply clearing off the stones, brush and other rubbish, filling upthe gullies, spading up the earth around the trees and shrubbery, extending and graveling the walks thro' the grounds taken in by the new fence ; in short, only what any commo private citizen would feel ashamed of himself if he did not do with respect to his own grounds about his dwelling. Now, why was this not done? There has been no difficulty in doing other things involving from ten to a hundred times the expense, and this, too, without hesitation, delay, or even adver-tising for bidders. Take the new court house fence, for instance. This was sprung upon the people at the very first meeting of the new Board of Commissioners, ostensibly convened merely to wind up old business There was no trouble at all in committing the commissioners to this at once. The fence was needed, and we have nothing to object, only that the job ought to have been regularly let. But we dare affirm, and feel sure that the public generally will sustain us in the assertion, that the matter of putting the grounds in order was much more urgent and really more important than the fence itself. The old fence made a more respectable appearance than the grounds, and now the contrast makes them look vastly worse. It suggests the scriptural quotation about making clean the outside of the platter, etc., or (as we have before suggested), Dr. Holmes' comparison about "hedge hogs dressed in lace," The object of the fence, we take it, is to protect the grounds, and if everything there is allowed to run to chaos, a fine fence is superfluous and a burlesque. We repeat, the wonder with everybody must be, that while there was no difficulty in finding other objects of far greater expenditure this most obvious need was overlooked or held to be unattainable. Search for subjects of improvement was even extended to the roof of the court house! We would humbly suggest that our county commissioners might have found in the matter we have pointed out, something which really needed attention, without soaring so high, only to be rewarded by the discovery of a huge "mare's nest."

We leg leave to suggest, in concluif our county and town authorities th mselves unequal to the task of putting in order the court house grounds as we have indicated, that they turn the matter over to a committee of ladies of our town, who, we have no doubt, would soon have the work completed in good style.

The Personal Column.

As the FREE PRESS is we believe favorably distinguished for the number and interest of its "Personals," we copy from a Northern exchange the following truthful tribute to the Personal column. It happily illustrates the saying of the poet-" 'tis pleasant to see one's name in print":

A great deal can often be heard in regard the first to read that column, to see if their pames have been mentioned. It is really vails. the most popular column in the whole pa-per, and is sought and read before any oth-er in the paper. It is wonderful what a fas-cination it has for most every reader, especially for the lady reader. "O, let me see the Gazette—I want to see who is in the city and who is going away," says Miss Josephine, and snaps the paper out of her mother's hands, utterly regardless of the laws of good breeding, sits down and gives her ma the whole substance of the column, without scarcely time to take breath, with the usual comments. She reads one:

Found at Last.

Mr. Charles B. Roby, the young man em ployed in our office, has just received direct information of a long lost brother. A brief history of this long separation may not prove uninteresting to the readers of

In the year 1857, Francis M. Roby, the subject of our sketch, at the age of sixteen was allowed by a devoted father to choose his future course in life, and at once chose that of a seaman, and in the year above mentioned received and accepted the appointment to Annapolis, the U. S. naval cademy. In 1860, just as young Roby had graduated with high honors at that famous school, and entered upon his duties as midshipman in the United States navy, the bugle blasts of war were sounded all over the north. He at once bade good-bye to the old ship he loved so dearly and hastened home to his dear southland and tendered his then youthful services to his native state-Mississippi, and as soon as his commissionthat of a lieutenant-was received from Jefferson Davis, he entered the service of the Confederate navy. In the latter part of 1867 he received a severe wound on the head which came near proving fatal. In the year following he was assigned by the Confederate congress as blockade runner and spent most of his time in England and other foreign countries. Returning to this country in the winter of 1865, and for the first time during the war, he paid his old home a flying visit, only to find his once happy home destroyed, his aged father long since in his grave, and a weeping mother still praying for her long lost boy. In the spring of the same year when the banner of the Lost Cause was folded for its last time, he again returned to his native town, and veiwing for a brief season the scenes of boyhood days, now made desolate by the cruel hand of war, he again bade those near and dear to him a long farewell.

"A life on the ocean wave,
A home on the rolling deep," had charms for young Roby, and leaving his native land he entered the French pavy as some small officer. After serving in that capacity only for a short time, a law was put in force that no foreign-born one could ever rise higher than the position he then held, so he resigned, and after traveling for several years as correspondent for the New York Herald in various countries of the old world again returned to this country. But the adventurous spirit of this young sailor would not allow him to live on "dry land," so he joined Capt. Fry, and others of his old Confederate "chums" and was again out at sea for several years. In 1869 he disappeared from New Orleans, and his whereabouts were unknown to his brother who had supposed him long since dead or a naturalized citizen of some foreign country until a few days ago
